

Walter W. Morley, who developed and perfected the Teletypesetter, died last week in Los Angeles at 70 — but he lived to see his automatic device sweep through the newspaper composing rooms of America.

Otto Mergenthaler invented the Linotype two generations ago and enabled men to set type at a keyboard instead of picking the letters out of a printer's case by hand.

Walter Morley developed an automatic operator for the Linotype keyboard, ran it with type perforated on electric typewriters — and doubled the production of type. The greatest application of his device was to telegraph news, which could be punched in type one time only, at a central location in each state, and then distributed by telegraph and turned into type in all the cities of the state without further keyboard work.

All this is relatively new. The Associated Press, United Press, and International News Service set up their Teletypesetter stations only since World War II. Today they are found from coast to coast, and the Teletypesetter operating units are standard equipment on hundreds of newspaper typesetting machines, both Linotype and Intertype.

No. 1 of all these newspaper automatic circuits was the Southwest Arkansas system set up 10 years ago, June 19, 1942. Associated Press copy was punched into tape at Hot Springs and turned into type automatically at Hope Star, Magnolia Banner-News, and Camden News, with El Dorado Evening Times receiving typewritten copy on the same telegraphic impulse. Today this circuit, now telegraphing tape to all points, serves eight newspaper cities, from Texarkana on the west to Helena on the east, and from De Queen on the north to El Dorado on the south.

Ten years is a long time as mechanical gambles are measured. Back in 1940 when C. E. Palmer, Ray Kimball, and I decided to make this commitment, Walter Morley's device had been perfected only five years. It was put on the market by Teletypesetter corporation (division of Teletype) in 1935, but had few takers.

Following the 1940 decision to try it out Mr. Palmer discovered the Texas Newspaper Publishers association wanted to go along on our "guinea pig" venture, and they offered to loan us half the cost of the automatic equipment without interest in order to have access to our work-shops. We took "em up, and the spring of 1941 the equipment was ordered. It was installed the spring of 1942, the wire opened June 19 of that year — and the rest is history. Long ago the Texans were repaid, and now the pioneer Southwest Arkansas circuit is just one of scores operating across America. The boom started the minute World War II was over.

Walter Morley was a quiet humble man. He visited us twice at The Star. I recall that he used to caution George W. Hosmer, mechanical superintendent, and myself against referring to him as "Teletypesetter's inventor." "Developer and perfecter, but not inventor," Mr. Morley insisted. He explained it this way:

The perforated tape idea is an old one. Mr. Morley said he saw perforated tape running an early model Monotype, assembling letters singly instead of in a line, in San Francisco about 1906. That, he said, was the moment he got the idea of applying the perforated tape principle to the much more complicated keyboard Linotype.

Many years were to intervene before he reached the market. In the early 1920's he was helped by Frank Gannett, Rochester (N.Y.) publisher, and in 1927 his first complete device was used to set automatically 35 lines of type on the story of Lindbergh's flight to Paris.

In the early 1930's the machine was perfected, was placed with Teletype corporation, Chicago, and was put on the market in 1935 by a newly-organized subsidiary, Teletypesetter corporation. Mr. Morley served on the board of directors until his retirement five years ago. He returned to the West Coast, where he worked as a young printer, and there he died last week.

But not before he had seen patience rewarded, his device proven, and sales running into millions — another chapter in America's great tradition of men and machines.

It is the year 1912 and we had Henry Lemay and his wife, Henriette, living in a small cottage in a quiet suburb of New York City. They were a happy couple, and their only child, a young girl named Julie, was the joy of their lives. Henry was a successful businessman, and his wife was a devoted mother. They were both proud of their little girl, who was a bright and cheerful child.

CHAPTER FOUR
 "TO CHANGE the subject," Henri continued, "I saw that O'Connell was here this afternoon with his uncle. He's a real city boy."

"For good?" she inquired.
 "That's what I'd like to find out," Henri said. "I suppose O'Connell will know. The Colonel," he added, hating to admit the fact, "goes to see her sometimes."

"Well, Brother," Henri said, "until you find out that he is going to be here for good, don't worry about it. In the first place, Lemay has probably outgrown the attachment. And in the second place, what can't be cured must be endured. She put the sauce dish and spoon on the window sill and took up her sewing. "You must be careful now not to plague me about it. You forget how willful she is."

In the absence of his niece, Henri carried in his mind an image of her that was little short of perfection. He wished.

"I wish you wouldn't always criticize the child," he said. "And as for opposing any association between them, it's my plain duty. I can't have my niece going with the nephew of that big game."

"You're too hard on the Colonel, Brother," Henri said.
 An Henri could not discuss the Colonel without excitement, he muttered "big game" again, turned, and went downstairs to do a few vocal exercises.

Somewhat chastened by confession, Miss Julie sat down to supper with her daughter's family in a pensive mood. She fortified herself with scrambled eggs and muffins as if she were expecting a famine.

"I met Henri Lemay on King street today," she said, "looking like a plucked chicken, as usual."

son-in-law, listened politely.
 "Poor Cousin Henri," said Annette.

Miss Julie regarded her daughter thoughtfully. "Well, child," she said, "I'm not sure I feel too sorry for him right now. Henri is riding a very high horse these days. He was on his way to tell me that some New York lawyers have written to him that there's a fortune waiting for them in one of the biggest swindles going."

Miss Julie stiffened.
 "It is entirely possible," she said, "that there's been money in the Lemay family as well as in any other."

"Who said there wasn't?" Henri asked blandly.
 "And I don't like your use of the word 'swindle' about something concerning my family," said Miss Julie.

"I'm sorry," Henri said. "However, there are a good many cases of lawyers making money by this sort of thing. They need so much for proving descent and so forth, and by the time they get it all, always turns out that the government has taken over the money for taxes."

"Well, I must say," Miss Julie declared, momentarily sidetracked, "they've got a lot to do cheating poor people like that."

"But they do," Henri said. "If I were you, Miss Julie, I'd try to persuade Mr. Lemay not to have anything to do with this business. If it's on the level the lawyers will be anxious enough to make something out of it and they'll probably do all the work on a contingent fee—a percentage of what they collect."

"Maybe if Cousin Henri gets all that money he'll marry Miss Annette Fielding," Joe suggested.
 "Don't make fun of the poor old gentleman, Joe," Henri said, directing a frown at his son and then at Annette, who was choking with laughter. Miss Julie, always deeply suspicious of merriment, asked what the joke was and it had to be repeated.

"Romeo and Juliet," she chuckled. "Still, you never can tell. There's many a good tune played on an old fiddle."

Henri Lemay, having eaten his own meager supper of biscuits, molasses, and tea, had gone to his room to make his toilette before going to pay his regular Saturday night visit to Miss Antoinette Fielding.

Presently he descended the piazza steps, plucked a petunia for his buttonhole, and was off.

China, won Russian assent to creation of a United Nations commission to study atomic energy control and left unresolved only the question of what to do about the Red revolution in Northern Iran.

Truman, however, saw the result of the Moscow meeting in an entirely different light.

In the document Truman said he would never agree to recognize the governments of Rumania and Bulgaria unless they were "radically" reorganized. Eventually the U. S. did recognize both governments.

Truman said, too, the United States should protest violently against Russia's conduct in Iran.

He predicted Russia would invade Turkey and seize the Dardanelles unless confronted with force.

He said that what the United States should do therefore was to make its own demands on Russia, including internationalization of Communist-held waterways like the Danube and a settlement of Russia's land-lease debt to this country.

20 Bail Out, But Two Die in Crash

Dallas, March 18 (AP)—A Navy Marine pilot ordered 20 servicemen out of a burning transport yesterday, then stuck with the plane until it passed over a residential area in southeast Dallas.

Two of the men were killed in parachute accidents. A third was missing. None of the others suffered injuries.

The known dead were identified as Lt. Cmdr. Lewis Joseph Garfield, Downey, Calif., and Marine Cpl. Carl L. Ductor of Cherry Point, N. C.

The blaring two-engine plane crashed and exploded in an open field about one-fourth of a mile from a residential area. The left engine which had burned itself out of the plane, smashed into a field about two miles from the crash.

Capt. R. C. Wesley, Pensacola, Fla., the pilot, parachuted to safety from about 500 feet while the plane was in a screaming dive.

"I stayed with the plane because I wanted to make sure it missed those houses," he said. "I sure hope that falling engine didn't hurt anyone."

The body of Lt. Cmdr. Garfield was found near the wreckage of the plane. He apparently was dragged to death on the ground by his parachute in strong surface winds. Cpl. Ductor's body was found in an open field with his parachute open.

Bound from El Toro, Calif., to Cherry Point, N. C., on a regular transport trip, the plane had landed to refuel at the Dallas Naval Air Station, then taken off.

Wesley said he turned back to the field when the engine caught fire. "I ordered the men to bail out when I saw I couldn't make it," he said.

DOROTHY DIX

Inattentive Beau
 Dear Miss Dix: I am a girl of 20, working in a business office. Last summer I met a wonderful young man, and went with him three times during my vacation. About two weeks later he called and invited me to a football game. In another two weeks he again asked me to a game. Now he is away at college, and I haven't heard from him in several weeks. I know he's busy but I should think he could spare a few minutes for an occasional phone call. How can I get him to keep in touch with me?

Answer: College boys who take their work seriously have little time for social life; even the small amount of time taken out for a short telephone call can ill be spared from a grueling program of math, science, Latin and Greek as a working girl you, of course, have much more leisure and more time for recreation. Suppose you just go out on such other dates as come along, and wait for your college man to have another vacation. I'm sure you'll find his interest in you unabated. In the meantime, just to keep yourself in his thoughts, a greeting card might be sent or you could mail him a short, friendly letter enclosing a joke or cartoon that might amuse him. Just don't try to intrude too far into his scholastic life.

Ashamed Of Family
 Dear Miss Dix: For the past year I have been going with a boy who is 20. He is very considerate in all ways but one. He has never taken me to meet his family. He has met my people and comes over to our house quite a bit. Do you think I should ask him to take me to meet his folks, or forget about it?

Answer: Forget about it! It is not your place to suggest meeting the family; he should have thought of it long ago. The obvious reason for his neglect is that he is ashamed of his folks—or possibly he feels that you won't measure up to their standards. The former is probably true. Perhaps his home is not impressive enough; so he thinks, for you, or the furniture not grand enough. Of course, he shouldn't have an inferiority complex about his surroundings, but most young people do. You could express curiosity about his family and mention that you'd love to know them, but further than that you can't press the subject.

Dear Miss Dix: I am very annoyed over an underweight problem. I'm nearly 18, and weigh 85 pounds. I'm nice looking otherwise, but am so dreadfully skinny. What can I do to gain weight?

Answer: The best thing to do is talk the problem over with your

Betty Hutton in Surprise Marriage

District Judge Frank McNamee said he married the couple at 1:15 a. m.

The actress, who is 31, obtained a final decree of divorce in Los Angeles Jan. 24 from Ted Briskin, Chicago and Hollywood camera manufacturer. They had two children.

Last August Miss Hutton announced her engagement to film producer Norman Krassna but the romantic attachment was called off two weeks later.

She recently has been dating O'Curran. Only last week she returned from a trip to Korea, where she entertained troops.

Missing Quarter Proves Costly

Indianapolis, March 18 (AP)—Twelve-year-old Thaddeus Starks lost a quarter in his bedroom Monday, and his search for it cost his father several hundred dollars.

The boy lighted a candle to aid in his search. His bed caught fire. Firemen confined the blaze to the room, but the father, Floyd A. Starks, said damage amounted to several hundred dollars.

The quarter still is missing.

There are about 75,000 people in Cork, Ireland, and its suburbs.
